

Domain Names

By Luciano Guerra

The right domain name for your site is important. Preferably you want a name that is not only memorable, but is also easy to spell and has some connection to you and/or your website's content and/or purpose.

If you do not already have a domain name registered for your site, you need to come up with one and check to see if it is available by clicking on the link I've provided directly below the link to this page. If your first choice is not available, you will need to keep coming up with names and checking them for availability until you come up with one that is not already taken.

I prefer .com domain names but I have used .net and .us names in the past if the domain name I wanted was not available as a .com. You may choose to do the same if the .com version of your first choice is already taken or you may choose to keep looking for a .com name that will work.

Once you have found a domain name that is available for registration, do not register it. Instead, if I am going to build your site for you, let me know which name you want and I will register it for you (at cost of course). The domain name will be yours, but it will have to be under my name if I am going to build and maintain your site.
